How are all pupils learning in history?

The history curriculum ensures inclusive learning through:

- Differentiated Teaching: Adapting resources and activities to meet the needs of all learners.
- Active Learning Strategies: Role plays, debates, and source analysis to engage students.
- Cross-Curricular Connections: Integrating geography, literature, and sociology for richer understanding.
- Use of Technology: Digital archives, online tools, and multimedia for interactive learning.
- Regular Assessment and Feedback: Monitoring progress through written assignments, discussions, and presentations.

How are pupils assessed in history?

Assessment is integral to ensuring pupils' understanding and progress, using:

- Knowledge Tests: Assessing understanding of key facts and themes.
- Source Evaluations: Analysing primary and secondary evidence for reliability and utility.
- Essay Writing: Developing structured, evidence-based arguments.
- Creative Projects: Encouraging innovative ways of presenting historical insights.
- Reflections and Reviews: Using feedback to improve understanding and skills.

All students receive detailed written feedback on their performance, accompanied by structured opportunities to review and reflect on their work. This reflective process helps students identify strengths, address areas for improvement, and set goals for further progress.

Student work is marked and reviewed using the CAN system, focusing on where the work Complete, Accurate and Neat and making corrections developing good practice for the future.

How can students progress in history?

The study of history provides a strong foundation for further education and diverse careers. Progression includes:

- GCSE History: Deepening understanding of key themes and refining analytical skills.
- A-level History: Providing academic rigor and preparing students for university study.
- University and Beyond: History links to degrees and careers in law, journalism, politics, education, heritage management, and more.

History is regarded as a facilitating subject by the top universities in the country. Facilitating subjects are the subjects most commonly required or preferred by universities to get on to a range of degree courses.

History fosters versatile skills for a wide range of careers, such as:

- Historical Research and Academia
- Law and Legal Services
- Journalism and Media
- Public Administration and Policy
- Museum and Heritage Management
- International Relations and Diplomacy
- Education and Teaching

How can pupils enrich their knowledge and understanding in history?

Local and National Visits:

- Trips to places like Muncaster Castle benefits history students by immersing them in centuries of heritage. They explore medieval architecture, family histories, and links to regional events. Engaging tours, historical artefacts, and stories of past inhabitants provide students with a tangible connection to England's feudal, Tudor, and Victorian eras.
- Visits to Leeds and Manchester provide insights into urban development, regeneration, and historical change.

International Trips:

- The 2025 trip to Iceland offers a unique opportunity to study culture and history in one of the most historically fascinating countries.

Theatre Trips:

- Linking History to cultural aspects by attending plays or performances that explore historical themes and social change.

Wider School Participation:

Film Club enhances the study of history by showcasing films that depict key historical events, figures, and cultures. It allows students to visualize the past, understand diverse perspectives, and critically analyse how history is represented in media. This approach deepens engagement, fosters discussion, and complements traditional historical learning methods.

Conservation and Rewilding encourages student to research heritage sites, and explore environmental changes over time. Students learn about historical land use, traditional conservation methods, and the impact of past societies on the environment, fostering historical and ecological awareness.

Needlework encourages students to practice traditional techniques like embroidery or quilting, and studying historical fashion trends. Students develop sewing skills while exploring how clothing reflects cultural identity.

A visit to a historical site can put what is taught in the classroom into context, and many sites offer interactive, hands-on and immersive experiences specifically designed to meet the needs of different groups across the key stages. Not only do visits help with the students' overall enjoyment and deeper understanding of the subject, they also encourage them to realise there are a lot of other historical sites in the country they can visit for their education, like galleries and museums. Recommended sites that would help further students understanding of topics studied in the curriculum are:
